A BARON AS A BAR-TENDER.

Why He Fled from Germany and A very strange story has just come to tight in Albany, N. Y., which bears all the evidences of truth. Mr. Henry Dorr, a prominent saloon-keeper here, vouches for the main facts, and many of our citizens knew the here of the story. The Albany Times to-night gives the facts somewhat to this extent: Returns There.

Times to-night gives the facts somewhat to this extent:

"Until within a few weeks ago there was employed at Heary Dore's Cosmopolitan Beer Saloon, in this city, a young man as bar-tender, going by the name of Charles Melz, whose classical accomplishments astonished many of the frequenters of the place. He possessed a knowledge of Greek and Latin, was ready at classical quotations, was an adept at fencing, and spoke fluently in English, French, and Spanish, as well as in German. He was a handsome man, with the filonde German aspect, tail and slender, and cultivated a full bloude meustache. He was always reticent about himself, dressed very quietly, seldom desired to talk with any one upon current affairs, and had avery slight accent. When people who came there wished to indulge in quotations from any author, whether classic or otherwise he seemed to take an interest, and, from any author, whether classic or other-wise, he seemed to take an interest, and, for a time, he became among the better ed-ucated members of the Legislature auditheir relating to literature. His skin in territing was disclosed accidentally, when a friend lunged at him with a cane, and he, coming outside the her took are took are took as the coming outside the her took are to lunged at him with a cane, and he, coming outside the bar, took another cane, and in a few passes struck his friend two or three times in the ribs, and then by a dexterous twist, wrested the weapon from him, throwing it twenty feet away. No one knew his history. He went on drawing beer, seldom drinking, and never telling the story of his life.

drinking, and never tening the salety of his life.

"On May 29th a brother of Me'z came into the saloon, and a warm greeting took place between them. The brother remained here several days, when both went to New York, where they now are, at what address is not known. But before he left Melz confided to Henry Dorr his history, which is one of the most curious romanees outside of action. He is the eldest son of Baron Steubendorl, of Saxony, who is said to be one of the most powerful leaders of the opposition to Bismarck in that State, and was sent to Heidelberg University in 1877, when he was eighteen years old, to complete his education. While there, although a very diligent student at his books, he was also a very studious scholar at the most necessary art in Heidelburg, that of fencing. He was also someburg, that of feeeing. He was also some-what of a roysterer, and frequently com-plaints were made to his father by the Heidelberg authorities of his dangerous pranks.
The father, however, was very let ient, and readity condoned the offences of his son, inasmuch as he had himself been a lad of same sort when he was at the same in-

"One night, when young Melz and his tellow-students were more bilarious than asual, they serenaded the daughter of a wealthy burgher named Schoppfen, to whom Melz had been paying attention, and white doing so a patrol commanded by a Lieutenant Wertzen ordered them to disperse. Melz proposed coolly to the Lieutenant that the two settle the matter between them with swords on the spot. The challenge was accepted, and in two passes Melz passed his weapon through the Lieutenant's breast. Melz's friends immediately hurried him away, and after several weeks of hiding he was enabled to area the Variable.

LIGHTNING-RODS.

THE SEASON OF THUNDER-STORMS is approaching, and for the protection of life and property vou need a good LIGHTNING-ROD. We have the best and cheanest that are made, and we have the best and cheanest was enabled to cross the Vosges me was enabled to cross the Vosges mountains, make his way by rail to Marseilles, whence he sailed for America. He arrived in New York, attempted school-teaching, found it paid him little more than his board, came to Albany, and for nearly six months was a bar-tender for Henry Dorr. In the mean time he had heard nothing from home, not having written for fear that his takes resuld be implicated in his crime by home, not having written for fear that his father would be implicated in his crime by the Bismarck reqimé, and it was only at the close of last month that he heard a word from home. On May 29th the younger brother of Melz found him after two years' search, and gave him the information that search gave him the information that the father had died two years before and communication with the Bismarck Government and found that the crime of the in a duel will probably be condoned. They expect to sail at once for home."

Stealing a Flock of Sheep.

A Beliaire (Ohio) telegram says: David and James Ramsey own a large farm jointly in the southern part of this county, and are extensive wool-growers. Their flocks are divided into lots of forty or fifty, and pasture on different parts of the farm. Last Thursday a flock of 'orty-three sheep was missing. They began a search, keeping the used." [Signed] HUNTER MCGUIRE. M. D. matter quiet, and finally on Saturday found that the sheep had been driven to the river and shipped on a boat to Pittsburgh. David Ramsey went to that city on Monday, and, securing an officer, traced the sheep to an Allegheny bute'er, who had purchased the entire flock for a mere trifle. He told Mr. Ramsey that he was satisfied that the sheep had been stolen, but they were offered and he bought the forty-three sheep for $10 and the freight. A compromise was effected, and Mr. Ramsey was paid $3 a heaf for bis sheep. No clue to the identity of the thieves was obtained. This is the second flock of sheep that has been stolen in the same neighborhood. The farmers have organized a vigilance association.

The Wrong Man Murdered. A Wilmington (Del.) special says: Patrick O'Brien, a laborer from White Hall, N. Y., employed on the Baltimore and Philadelphia railroad, was shot and fatally wounded in a drinking-saloon at Silver Brook, a suburb of this city, by the bar-keeper, Adolph Kettner, last evening. O'Brien, with a number of other men, was in the hotel, when Samuel Patterson, a young man against whom Kettner bore some malice, entered the saloon. The bar-keeper deliberately drew a large revolver from the drawer, and aimed it at Patterson's head. The latter jumped down in front of the stove, and the bullet went wide of its mark. The excited German discharged two more loads, one of which passed through O'Brien's eye and ohia railroad, was shot and fatally wounded which passed through O'Brien's eye and lodged in his brain. The wounder man expired about midnight, and Kettner, who surrendered himself, is held for court by the coroner's jury.

Brief News Items.

In New Jersey, at least, defaulters do not enjoy immunity from punishment. The State prison at Trenton holds now two bank presidents, four bank cashiers, a county treasurer, and a city auditor who are serving out long sentences for embez-zlements and robberies. They are accused of having misappropriated in the aggro-gate $2,670,000.
